"Remember the former things of old: for I am God, . . . and there is none like Me, _____ the _____ from the _____, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done." Isaiah 46:9-10

NOTES: In contrast with this, note the following confession of a noted modern historian as to man's inability to reveal the future:- "History has yet made so slight progress toward the scientific basis that she is able to foretell nothing that is to be hereafter. As to the future, she is stone-blind. There is not a philosopher in the world who can forecast the historical evolution to the extent of a single day. The historian is as completely dumb before the problems of 1895 as a charlatan weather-prophet ought to be with respect to the meteorological conditions of the next season. The year will come and go. It will fulfil its purpose in the great calendar of man-life. Its events and issues will be evolved with scientific exactitude out of antecedent conditions. But no man living can predict what the aspect and event will be. The tallest son of the morning can neither foretell nor foresee the nature of what is to come in the year that already stands knocking at the door."- John Clark Ridpath, in Christian at Work, Dec. 27, 1894. Knowing all things, the future is present with God. More, perhaps, than any other one thing, the prophecies of the Bible and their fulfillment bear witness to its divine inspiration.
